

SOUND Audience tape on the good side of average.

IMAGE Tonight's left-floor, hand-held camera gives a film that constantly wavers, as if shot from a boat at anchor, slowly rising and falling on the swell - so not one for the easily sea-sick. While also remaining moderately distant, the image is nicely coloured and well-preserved (no trails or ghosting - see below) and neither odd video glitches nor the steady parade of bodies passing before the lens do any lasting harm.

RUNNING TIME 99 minutes, all songs complete.

PERFORMANCE The show starts with a Jokerman that, lightning-quick, lives up to its name but gradually improves and from LMZ on is not half bad.

HIGHLIGHTS Born In Time, God Knows and the acoustic songs all come over well.

COMMENT DVDs like this one serve to remind us how lucky we are. When I happened upon this wonderful resource called DVDylan, I expected to see lots of recordings like this - competently taped, carefully assembled and generously circulated, but, though enjoyable enough, still unmistakably amateur (see D592.su or D328 for more of the same). Yet the continual surprise and delight of this community is the steady trickle of top quality fan-made recordings that far outstrip such modest expectations: discs like D133.su, D236.su and D322.su to name but three (and there are probably a good many more). There's nothing wrong with D072.su except that, in comparison, it's ordinary, which is to say okay but not great. So chase it or not, as you see fit.

THANKS MR

STARS Raucous (and quickly tiresome) cries of Bellissimo!, Fantastique! and Bravo! notwithstanding*, I'm going with three and a half.

* It won't lessen your appreciation of Dylan to think critically about his work. It will in fact deepen your engagement with the art and move your relationship with it from passive and obedient consumer to something more alive and dynamic and less personal, more curious and active, closer to your own humanity and Bob's.
